

A Near Miss Not Reported is The Next Accident

Health and Safety policies are rigorously set up in the workplace. However, it is impossible to eliminate all potential risks.

NEAR MISSES are warnings for serious injury, hazard, or damage.

Here are some examples for common near misses:

- Mishandling of chemicals or hazardous materials
- Transportation close calls
- Equipment malfunctions
- Slips, trips, and falls without injury
- Signage-related incidents
- Narrow escapes from hazards

★ Though the worst possible outcomes of a near miss are not realized, affected employees should still report it as an unsafe event.

Reasons Why You SHOULD Report Near Misses

1. Establish safe practices in the workplace
2. Improve safety program and fines.
3. Allow employer to communicate the facts, causes, and corrective actions to all employees.
4. Value data collection and identify possible trends and potential risks.
